

Dr Imogen Brunner has had a long career in NHS general practice and is currently a GP partner of two NHS surgeries in North Westminster which looks after nearly 14,000 patients as well as having an executive role in the central London GP federation. She has worked almost exclusively with multi-cultural communities in some of London's most socio-economically deprived wards and has considerable experience in both child and adult safeguarding. In addition, her practice offers a specialist performing arts health service for students at a London music conservatoire and she is a tutor of Imperial Medical School medical students. She plays the violin, double bass and poker.

Imogen has been a Safeguarding Trustee from Nucleo's inception and continues to support Nucleo on Safeguarding as an Advisory Council Member.
